

Nurturing an inclusive and supportive research culture and environment in the Japanese and UK Context

Symposium

University College London (UCL) and Tohoku University are research-intensive institutions located in very different cultural, socio-economic and institutional contexts. However, both universities share a common mission to promote inclusive and supportive research cultures and environments. Led by Professor Lynn Ang (UCL) and Professor Kazuko Suematsu (Tohoku University), the joint project 'Delivering research excellence within an inclusive, diverse and equitable research culture', has brought together a cross-cultural, cross-institutional network of researchers, scholars and senior professional service leaders to develop an understanding of, and share best practice on, 'what works' in tackling research culture challenges. The project team has been collaborating for almost two years and we have undertaken a scoping review and convened a joint roundtable, seminars and other cross-institutional initiatives. At this final symposium, we will present the project's findings from the joint research. We look forward to your participation!

Monday
17 March

8:30 ~ 9:30 GMT
17:30 ~ 18:30 JST

Hybrid

Venue for in-person participants:

Lecture Building A202

Kawauchi Kita Campus, Tohoku University

Prof. Geraint Rees

UCL Vice-Provost

Research, Innovation &
Global Engagement

Prof. Masahiro Yamaguchi

Tohoku Vice President

for Education Reform and Global Engagement

SPECIAL GUESTS

Register in advance!

IOE = Faculty of Education and Society

